

I spent time thinking about what to include in my nail salon database. A nail salon has many moving parts, and I wanted to include everything important without making it too complicated.

After researching how nail salons work and using my own knowledge, I focused on seven main areas:

- Customer information
- Services offered
- Employee records
- Appointment bookings
- Product inventory
- Payment records
- Supplier information

These are all essential for running the business well.

One thing I added that isn't essential was memberships. I believed it would add to the mini-world because I know of many nail salons and private nail techs that use memberships.

I chose information that would help provide better customer service and keep the business running smoothly. For example, we keep track of what services customers like and when they visit, which helps us give them better service. We also track our product inventory to make sure we don't run out of popular items. To handle money properly, we record all payments and employee rent.

To keep things simple and easy to manage, I left out anything that wasn't absolutely necessary. For example, I decided to leave marketing information out of the system. I also made sure each section of the database only includes what I consider the most important details, which makes it easier to use and maintain.
